

COVID Impacts on food and family Where We Are Now...

Prior to COVID-19 life wasn't easy for families in Kenya. Many families typically survive on $1 a day.

One dollar a day doesn't go very far when considering the cost of food, rent and all other living expenses.

Since businesses have been shut down due to COVID-19, people struggle even more to provide for their families.

Small business owners who sell only at the market cannot "work from home". Some are forbidden to sell their wares.

It's impossible to work from home for office workers when most homes have no computers, no access to the internet and sporadic times with no electricity.

These are challenges impossible to overcome until things begin to open again.

To date, Olalo of Hope-Kenya has made over 363 food deliveries to families and covered many rents to keep families in their homes.

Everyday Olalo has requests from people who have nothing left to eat and they are asking for help.

Funds to cover food and rent are depleting.

Our newest project on GlobalGiving can help avoid telling others in desperate need of food that we cannot help. Any consideration is greatly appreciated.
